AUTISM AND THE PREDICTIVE MIND, ABSOLUTE THINKING IN A RELATIVE WORLD:

Practical Implications for Treatment and Intervention

SPEAKER: PETER VERMEULEN, PHD

October 19, 2022 | 8:00 am - 3:30 pm Central Standard Time

ZOOM - INTERACTIVE WEBINAR

This Webinar will replay as a recording on Saturday, October 22nd beginning at 8 am Central Time. This is not a recording that can be downloaded and replayed at your own pace. All registered attendees will receive a link to the live webinar and a link to the recording replay on Saturday. Full attendance will be taken during the replay and will still qualify you for a certificate of attendance and other professional development opportunities listed. "Live" Q&A feature with the speaker will not be available, however you will have the ability to use the "chat" feature to interact with other participants. Same registration process for both live webinar and the recording replay.

Many ideas about the autistic brain are based on conceptions about the human brain that are outdated. The computer as a metaphor for the brain, with its input, processing and output, has been very useful in the past, but seems to be incorrect in the light of recent discoveries in brain science. The brain is not a computer: the brain is guessing more than it is computing. In order to make these smart guesses, the brain has developed a unique characteristic: contextual sensitivity. The brain uses context to predict the world. This is known as the predictive coding account of human information processing.

But what if your brain is not so talented in using context? What if your brain does think in absolutes? This is the case in autism. Difficulty seeing and understanding context can explain why people with an autism have difficulties with communication, social interaction, sensory stimuli, and flexible thinking and behavior in daily living.

We will explain the concept of absolute thinking (reduced contextual sensitivity in predicting the world). The predictive coding perspective offers some thought provoking new ideas, such as why traditional emotion recognition programs and traditional social skills training are not a good idea for children with autism and why autism friendliness is not the same as eliminating or reducing stimuli.

Financial Disclosure: Peter Vermeulen, Ph.D. receives an honorarium for his presentation with AEP Connections, LLC. Dr. Vermeulen is a paid autism trainer and also receives royalties for the books that he has written. Non-Financial: Dr. Vermeulen has reported no conflicts of interest, financial, or non-financial regarding this presentation.

AUTISM AND THE PREDICTIVE MIND, ABSOLUTE THINKING IN A RELATIVE WORLD: Practical Implications for Treatment and Intervention

SPEAKER: PETER VERMEULEN, PHD

PETER VERMEULEN, PHD

Peter Vermeulen, PhD in Psychology and Clinical Educational Sciences, has more than 35 years of experience in the field of autism. Founder of “Autism in Context”, where autism is understood in context. Peter is an internationally respected lecturer/trainer and he presents all over the world. Peter wrote more than 15 books and several articles on autism, some of them translated into more than 10 languages. For his +30 years of work in the field of autism, he received in 2019 a Lifetime Achievement Award.

LEARNER OBJECTIVES:

1. Knowing why the traditional model of understanding the brain (stimulus-response model) is not correct.
2. Understanding what predictive processing is and what the role is of context in predicting the world.
3. Understanding the effect of a reduced contextual sensitivity in predicting the world on social interaction, communication; theory of (own) mind and sensory processing.
4. Identifying the role of context in social interaction and communication.
5. Knowing what ‘pushing the context button’ means and how it is pivotal for teaching social cognitive and social behavioral skills.
6. Reflecting on the extent to which your own practice (teaching, therapy, ...) supports your clients/ students in seeing and using context
