to channel their motivation and go from Intention to Action by creating and carrying out plans and to sustain forethought for task planning across hourly and extended time horizons. Learn systematic ways to develop a student's situational intelligence and self-regulation. Understand the relationship between speed of processing and executive function and learn practical strategies to improve written expression, abstract thinking/problem solving and figurative language skills. Full of hands on experiential exercises and interactive case studies, you will take away practical strategies and reproducible handouts that are instantly usable upon your return to the clinic, classroom or home. Don't miss out this course it will fill up fast!

Presenter will use lecture, case studies, Q&A, etc. throughout the duration of the course (some video examples may be used).

LEARNER OBJECTIVES:

1. Differentiate and explain how situational awareness, self-talk, forethought and episodic memory are the foundational skills for successful task execution and state the functional relationship between executive function, working memory and speed of information processing as it pertains to therapeutic interventions.
2. Evaluate and select and implement 5 advanced applications to teach a student how to:
 - Visualize simple, multi-step and complex tasks and assignments and then sequence and plan the requisite steps to fully complete work and
 - Improve self-regulation and inhibition to meet behavior expectations.
3. Implement specific strategies to develop representational co-thought gesture for forethought and task planning.
4. Select and implement specific strategies to improve situational awareness and self-regulation skills to improve a students' ability to "stop and read a room" and transition to follow routines with a reasonable pace and requisite materials with less supervision and fewer prompts.
5. Develop and implement intervention strategies to improve a student's capacity to visualize and sense the passage of hourly and daily time, calculate how long tasks will take, break down and complete tasks and long term projects within allocated time frames and control for procrastination and time distractions.
6. Design and implement a block and box schema training to improve a student's processing speed for following routines, making decisions, planning tasks, doing assignments, completing writing assignments and engaging in social language/conversation skills.
7. Implement specific strategies to improve working memory for stronger mind miming forethought skills so students can go from intention to action to initiate and complete tasks and process information with greater accuracy and efficiency.
8. Design and implement specific strategies to improve processing of figurative and abstract language to reduce anxiety and teach a student how to tolerate novelty and develop flexible/gray scale thinking for problem solving.

This Webinar will replay as a recording on Saturday, March 22, 2025 from 9:00am to 3:30pm Central. Breaks will be shortened and a modified agenda will be sent out.
